gets endorsed and publicised by all the well known shills [see below] and she asks for donations. Anyone who is sincere - keen to spread the truth does NOT ask for money. <http://www.gofundme.com/1deqxo>

She tells her story on one of Sabine's sites here

<http://punishmentwithoutcrime.wordpress.com/2014/08/20/kellie-cottams-cry-for-help-to-stop-the-adoption-of-her-two-children> I bet if we saw some official documentation, we'd see a rather different story; one that would reveal some truth. She urges us to see the paperwork. Why doesn't she publish it?

Column forum, Johny Mac makes some good points:

“Now I'll say from the outset that I have bags of empathy, and I fully realise that the social services are massively inadequate, corrupt and indeed there is a nefarious agenda going on with state control and paedophilic gangs, but this woman is not helping the cause of Lord Justice Munby's ruling of transparency in my opinion. Infact I think she makes a mockery of other single mums and families that have much more plausible cases.

This is Kellie Cottam's crusade to get her own children back on the back of a national crisis that needs a lot more debate. She contradicts herself a lot. Example - being in care is bad, yet she says she benefited from having multiple 'parents' - gave her a more rounded perspective or in so many words.

She has four kids, two of which were to 'in her words' an abusive partner. She had all her children whilst being in a situation where she wasn't in a position to look after them - either on benefits or a student. She knew what she was doing when she had them. You can make one or two 'mistakes' maybe, but not four! If you are not in a position to financially support your children, you shouldn't automatically expect the government to support them and you instead. There's a lot of responsible working couples out there that realise they are not capable of supporting a large family, so choose not to.

I'm not saying that she doesn't love her kids or that in an ideal situation children should whenever possible be brought up by their natural or extended family. But in today's society where communities are less cohesive and families stretched across the country it's not always possible.

She's got a degree in.. whatever.. and has some knowledge in how to make things difficult for the ptbs. A little knowledge can be a dangerous thing though as the saying goes. I just hope she doesn't get the hopes up of some of the more vulnerable and naive mothers out there, to then screw it up for them all. She's a dangerous piece of work in my opinion even if the motives are admirable.

Not enough on personal responsibility here or the good that social services can and are doing. Social work is a hard enough job as it is, and it's not surprising that recruitment is falling big style after all this criticism. This is part of the plan by those who rule over us – crash present structures to give them the excuse to bring in their draconian NWO.

Some of you people are so caught up in your conspiracy bubble that common sense has gone out of the window!" This is by design. The C/O agents – LIARS - are paid to portray us all as conspiracy theorists. Some of us – HONEST FOLK - are presenting conspiracy facts.

Have a look at the points made by this adoptive father <http://www.theonehandman.co.uk/adoption/forced-adoption-post-response-to-kellie/> "In her comment to me she has implied that adopters are part of the problem with forced adoption, and as she has declared war on social services, we as adopters, are also firmly in her crosshairs.

I do not have all the facts of her case, and can provide no insight as to the truth behind her case. I can and have, however, taken exception to her targeting adopters as potential scapegoats for the removal of her children.

You mentioned that social services are 'out of control'. Social services do not consist of a horde of child catchers desperate to separate children from their loved ones. They are individuals tasked with an incredibly difficult job to provide care for our most vulnerable citizens – our children. I wonder if you are fully aware of what it takes to remove children from their homes? I suspect you don't fully understand how complex and difficult it is to raise a case for removing a child."

Claire comments:

"but I suspect the truth of the matter in Kellie's case will be in the details she does not or cannot share"

Rv says:

"I am an A&E doctor and I second that children are not snatched willy-nilly from their parents. In fact I'd often argue the contrary. I struggle to get any reaction when children come in with very suspicious injuries and disturbing delays in presentation (children who come in a week after breaking their arm). I'm not sure why there is this idea of a child-stealing conspiracy. Taking a child from their parents, paying for foster care and the court processes is phenomenally expensive compared to leaving a child where it is and adoptive parents don't pay anything to adopt a child- so what is social services motivation supposed to be?" Most of us know of families whereby social services should be stepping in. They don't, partly because they can't afford to intervene in all these cases, but mainly because the PTB want a complete breakdown in society; they want f*cked up families. They want people in a state of helplessness - uneducated and addicted to booze and drugs, on sickness benefits or on the dole, in poverty and resorting to crime - as such people are weakened and easier to control. Families are the backbone of society. If we have strong, decent, thinking people, it would be impossible for the ruling elite to press ahead with their NWO plan.

I notice the Randle-Jolliffe shill gets his tuppence ha'penny worth in!
